Interesting Facts about Brienzerburli GmbH, Brienz and Surroundings

History of Hotel Brienzerburli GmbH

Our ancestors primarily earned their living from agriculture and woodcarving. According to oral tradition, the property “uf dr Mur” has been in the family since 1520. “Uf dr Mur” is the local name of the land where Hotel Brienzerburli now stands.

During the constitutional unrest of 1830, the village was divided into two camps: the Blacks, i.e., the Conservatives, and the Whites, i.e., the Liberals. At that time, the only baker in the village was a Liberal and refused to provide bread to the Blacks. Quickly, the dairyman Melchior Huggler saddled his horse, rode to Thun, and ordered a stove builder—and probably a baker—to supply bread to his fellow party members. In the house “uf dr Mur”, the packhorse stable had become redundant. A stove was installed there, and a bakery was set up, which remained in operation in the old house until 1936.

In 1937, our great-grandfather Jakob Huggler built the new commercial building with four apartments, three guest rooms, a bakery, and a tea-room. The original oven can still be seen in the restaurant today.

After the completion of the new building in 1938, our grandparents Fritz and Mathilde Huggler-Thöni took over the business during difficult times. With great dedication and determination, they managed to survive the war years, during which Fritz Huggler was on active service in Valais.

The 1950s brought an economic upswing across many regions. In 1957, the Tea-Room extension was built on the west side

On 1st January 1975, our parents Peter and Edith Huggler-Arnold took over the business. Their goal was to transform the property Hotel Brienzerburli in the “Aenderdorf” into a modern, cozy hotel and hospitality establishment. Year by year, they worked step by step to implement and expand this vision.

In 1991, our father Peter Huggler acquired the property “Seerestaurant Löwen”, located opposite the Brienzerburli. The new establishment was successfully integrated into the existing concept, and many improvements have been made since then.

In winter 1999, the third floor of the Brienzerburli was expanded. One room was enlarged, and three new rooms were added, including the Honeymoon Room with breathtaking views of Lake Brienz. A wheelchair-accessible shower and toilet were also installed during this renovation.

In 2009, we acquired an adjacent half-house behind the Brienzerburli. Here, in the “Swiss-Chalet”, three new rooms in traditional Swiss style were created, along with a garden area featuring a millstone game, ping-pong table, pétanque court, and a place to relax.

In 2011, the opportunity arose to acquire the traditional “Hotel Weisses Kreuz” near the train station, which was still leased at the time. Since June 2012, we have operated it ourselves and continue to expand our business.

In summer 2015, we acquired the “Bistro Rothorn”, which fits very well into the concept of the Weisses Kreuz. It includes a self-service bistro on the ground floor and two apartments on the upper floors. The Bistro Rothorn is open from May to October.

“Schybärg Beizli” – Since winter 2023/24, we have operated a new seasonal project on the Axalp during the ski season, with a food container, wooden chalet and terrace directly on the slopes, leased from the Axalp ski lifts. This complements the summer operations of the Bistro Rothorn and is operated only during the ski season.

In 2024, we acquired the “Stähli Huus,” now “Edelweiss Apartments”, opposite the “Rössliplatz”, about 150 meters from Brienzerburli. Some apartments and a loft have already been completed, and more are under construction. This also gave us the opportunity to secure two private bus parking spaces and establish our own “We Wash” laundry salon.

Our family business, with its traditions and history, continues to inspire us. We are proud of the many expansions that have been realized and look forward to the challenges that the future will bring.

“Brienzen sparkling water”

The Swiss are a nation of mineral-water drinkers.

On average, people in Switzerland consume more than 125 litres of mineral water per person per year.

At the Brienzenburli, we have always made a point of offering only mineral water that comes from the local region. This makes particular sense from an ecological point of view, as the environmental footprint of a local product is significantly better than that of imported alternatives. Shorter transport distances, above all, make a real difference.

Transporting one litre of Swiss mineral water to the consumer requires between 0.2 and 0.3 decilitres of crude oil. Imported mineral water requires even more. In addition, the environment is further burdened by packaging and production processes.

Mühlebachfall ob Brienzen

Since 2006, we have been offering “Brienzen sparkling Water” in our restaurants. This water is collected by the Brienzen municipal utilities from three different natural springs, including one at Stättenried, directly below the Mühlebach falls, located just a few kilometres from our hotel.

When served, the table water is gently carbonated.

It has been extremely popular with our guests, thanks to its excellent taste and outstanding environmental balance, which truly speak for themselves.

By the way, Brienzen sparkling Water is also available to take away from our shop/reception in 0.5-litre and 1-litre PET bottles.

La Belle Batelière de Brienz

Elisabeth Grossmann

At the beginning of the 19th century, a simple yet strikingly beautiful young woman from the Bernese Oberland village of Brienz gained worldwide fame. Her name was Elisabetha Grossmann, known to contemporaries and posterity as “La belle Batelière de Brienz.”

Born in 1794 in what is now the village of woodcarvers, Elisabetha grew up in poor small-farmer circumstances. There were no railways yet, and no steamships. Instead, graceful young women from Brienz – often gifted singers – rowed the first tourists, mostly aristocrats, across the lake to the wild and romantic Giessbach Falls or even to Interlaken, then an emerging spa resort.

Elisabetha is said to have worked as a rowing boatwoman from a very young age to support her parents. The German-Russian Baron Wilhelm von Balk was so taken by the delicate, charming young woman that he felt she should no longer endure such hard labour. He paid for her to spend a year at a prestigious finishing school in Bern and offered her the choice of returning to Brienz or joining him in Russia afterward.

Elisabetha preferred her beautiful village with its high mountains, blue-green lake, and roaring Giessbach Falls, and thus – unknowingly heading toward a tragic fate – returned to work among the boatwomen.

She remained very beautiful and fond of singing, and the travelling aristocracy adored her. One listener in particular was deeply captivated: François Pettavel, a 22-year-old grammar-school professor of Latin and Greek from a respected Neuchâtel family.

After their meeting they corresponded regularly, until in late April 1815 François asked for Elisabetha's hand in marriage. He wrote to his mother announcing that he would arrive in Neuchâtel on Ascension Day with his fiancée and one of her brothers.

This letter caused alarm within the Pettavel family. A five-member family council was immediately convened, and decisive action was taken. The engaged couple never reached Neuchâtel territory – they were stopped in Aarberg. Elisabetha was not disliked by François' strict mother, but she was deemed insufficiently refined to be the wife of a nobleman.

François submitted to maternal authority, breaking Elisabetha's heart. Back in Brienz, she wrote him a final letter expressing her deep disappointment. François, now himself painfully affected, offered a compensation of 80 Louis d'or in his reply.

The former lovers never saw each other again. In late 1822, the now 31-year-old Pettavel married a woman from Neuchâtel of suitable social standing. He never forgot the beautiful boatwoman.

You can view the unique painting “La belle Batelière” at the Hotel Brienzerburli, located in the passageway next to the reception.

Historical Notes on Brienz

Brienz first appears in historical records in the 12th century. It is documented in 1146 under the name "Briens." It was the centre of a small lordship belonging to the Baron of Briens, a member of the renowned Raron family from Valais.

In the 19th century, economic activities began to take root that remain of great importance today: woodcarving and tourism. Woodcarving, initiated during the years of famine in 1816/17 by Christian Fischer, became a tradition in Brienz. In 1884, the School of Woodcarving was founded as a private institution. Since 1944, Brienz has also been home to the Swiss School of Violin Making.

With the introduction of steamship services in 1837, an important first step was taken in improving transport connections, which were crucial for tourism. This was followed in 1888 by the inauguration of the Brünig Railway, and in 1892 by the opening of the Brienz Rothorn Railway, the famous steam cogwheel railway.

Today, Brienz is a village with a socially diverse population, various trades and crafts, and a strong tourism industry.

Buildings, parked vehicles, roads and public transport infrastructure are damaged.
 - The intense rain and thunderstorm cell that moved over the village on Monday evening also severely affected the Brienz Rothorn Railway.
 - A stretch of 2.2 kilometers suffered major structural damage to the track, ballast foundation and drainage system.

Woodcarving in Brienz

Brienz woodcarving was founded in 1816 by Christian Fischer. He was a talented mountain farmer who spent the winters caring for his livestock in the Giessbach valley. During the long winter evenings, he passed the time carving and discovered his artistic talent. In summer, he sold his carved figures to tourists.

At its peak, around 1,000 people in the Interlaken–Brienz–Oberhasli region were involved in woodcarving (some chroniclers even speak of up to 2,500). Entire families—fathers, mothers and often children—carved bears, pen holders, letter openers, frames, plates, baskets and many other items alongside their modest farming activities. Many were self-taught. The true masters of the old school learned their craft at the carving school, achieving great skill and virtuosity in detail and natural realism.

As the trade grew, shops emerged and a flourishing market developed due to the high production volume. However, traders sometimes used unfair practices to push prices down. Over time, carvers produced a lot but were paid less and less. Many survived only thanks to small-scale farming as a secondary income.

On the other hand, there were also periods when woodcarving flourished and provided good earnings. The song "Brienzerburli," a humorous mocking song by carvers about farmers, likely originates from such a period.

Since 1816, Brienz woodcarving has experienced many ups and downs, numerous changes and developments, and has evolved into a modern yet deeply rooted profession.

Brienz School of Woodcarving

"Craft is always a work of the hands, but when it is inspired by the mind, it becomes a true satisfaction of the heart." This saying perfectly captures the spirit and purpose of the Brienz School of Woodcarving.

Long before the school was founded, the craft of woodcarving had already taken shape. Christian Fischer is considered the father of Brienz woodcarving; in 1816 he began producing souvenirs for visitors. Supported by the rise of summer tourism, the craft spread around Lake Brienz and into the Hasli Valley. Around 1860, carving schools were established in Brienz and Meiringen, followed later by drawing schools in several villages.

In 1884, the Brienz School of Woodcarving was opened as the successor to the drawing school. Initial successes soon followed. Subsequently, the Oberland Woodcarving Industry Association was founded to market the school's products. Nevertheless, the economic downturn from 1909 to 1923 did not pass without consequences. Tourism declined and an important source of income nearly disappeared. As a result, the school shifted towards toy production and architectural carving as alternative fields of work.

In 1927, the Canton of Bern took over the previously privately run school. From then on, it operated under the cantonal Department of Economic Affairs. Despite support from the Association of Oberland Woodcarvers (BOH), the crises of 1930 and 1947 were difficult years. Nevertheless, student numbers continued to rise, and space became increasingly limited. In 1950, the new school building was finally inaugurated.

Today, young people with manual and artistic talent can complete a four-year apprenticeship in all areas of woodcarving (human figures, animal figures, ornaments) and qualify as certified wood sculptors, a profession officially recognized by the Swiss authorities.

Brienzi School of Violin Making

The Brienzi School of Violin Making was founded in 1944 and led by Adolf König until 1973, during which time it was gradually developed. For a short period, he was supported by Frans van Dijk as a specialist teacher. Initially privately run, the school became a state institution in 1952. During König's era, almost all bowed and plucked string instruments were produced.

From 1974 to 1996, the school was directed by Ulrich Zimmermann. Under his leadership, training focused on the construction and repair of violins, violas and cellos using modern concepts. A key teacher was Hugo Auchli from 1972, followed by Simon Glaus from 1986.

In 1996, government subsidies were largely withdrawn as part of cost-cutting measures, putting the cantonal violin-making school at risk of closure. After a thorough evaluation, educators, cultural representatives, professional associations and politicians worked together to save Switzerland's only specialized violin-making school. In 1998, the Brienzi School of Violin Making Foundation was established. Thanks to financial support from many private individuals and public and private institutions, the school was able to continue operating without interruption under its new foundation structure.

From 1996 to 2019, the school was jointly led by Hans Rudolf Hösli and Simon Glaus. Today, instruments of the violin family remain the core focus of the training. In concept, construction methods and design, the school follows the models of the great masters of Baroque, Classical and modern violin making. The program lasts four years.

The Brienzi School of Violin Making is located in the old village center, close to the School of Woodcarving. (approx. 1 km away)

Guided tours offer insight into the craft of string instrument making and are available by prior arrangement only.

Brien Rothorn Railway - History

Switzerland's Only Steam Cogwheel Railway

There are many mountains called "Rothorn," but only one above Brien, overlooking the beautiful Lake Brien in the Bernese Oberland. Nowhere else can the ascent be experienced in such a romantic and impressive way: aboard the Brien Rothorn Railway, the oldest steam cogwheel railway in Switzerland. Since 1892, it has been chugging, hissing and steaming its way up to Rothorn Kulm. Climb a vertical difference of 1,678 meters without breaking a sweat! The reward is a breathtaking panoramic view and access to unique hiking routes.

History

The Brienzer Rothorn was already well known before the railway opened. In 1829, the point where the cantons of Bern, Lucerne and Obwalden meet was marked with a granite stone. Along with the Faulhorn, the Rothorn was one of the most famous viewpoints in the Bernese Oberland.

How and when the Rothorn got its name is uncertain. According to a legend, Obwalden herdsmen who owned alpine pastures on Lucerne territory allegedly boiled a man from Entlebuch in a cauldron of whey around the year 1380. A guard who was meant to prevent such crimes is said to have blown his alpine horn so forcefully during another attack that he died from the exertion, and his horn turned red with blood—giving the mountain its name, "Rothorn" (Red Horn).

Builders of the Railway

With the construction of the Rigi Railway in 1871, it was proven that steam locomotives could even conquer mountains. The Bernese Oberland wanted to keep pace with Central Switzerland in terms of tourism. In 1889, a committee of tourism-minded citizens from Brien was formed, led by the German engineer A. Lindner, who was living in Lucerne.

Lindner was fascinated by the idea of building what would then be the highest mountain railway in the world. He was a highly qualified railway expert and had also worked on the Gotthard Railway. In 1890, he wrote the "Memorandum on the Project of a Railway to the Rothorn."

Construction was entrusted to the master builder T. Bertschinger from Lenzburg. Having gained experience with the Seetal Railway, he dared to take on the entire project, including rolling stock, for a fixed price.

Construction of the Railway

In 1889, the Swiss Federal Assembly granted the concession to build the railway, and construction began in the summer of the same year. A contemporary report described the scene as follows:

“A lively and colorful bustle developed on the mountain. Work began immediately at the top and bottom, on scree slopes and rocky sections alike. Supplying the workers was no small challenge, and even hospitals had to be set up. At peak times, the workforce numbered 640 men, mostly Italians, housed in new barracks and old mountain huts in their well-known simple and practical manner.”

After just over one year of construction, on 31 October 1891, the first locomotive reached the summit of the Brienzer Rothorn, having travelled 7.6 kilometers and passed through six tunnels with a total length of 690 meters.

Operations officially began on 17 June 1892, and until 1914 steam trains ran regularly to the Brienzer Rothorn during the summer months. However, newly built railways in the region increasingly competed with the Rothorn Railway. With the outbreak of the First World War, passenger numbers declined further, and operations were suspended on 9 August 1914.

After 16 years of closure, service resumed in 1931. The locomotives and carriages stored in the depot were still fully operational, and the track infrastructure was in such good condition that the steam adventure on the Brienzer Rothorn could continue.

During its period of closure, the Rothorn Railway became the only steam cogwheel railway in Switzerland, as all others were electrified. Its value and uniqueness were now recognised and appreciated. It remains a living reminder of the romantic age of steam.

Route

With a track gauge of 80 cm, the route overcomes a vertical difference of 1,678 metres, with an average gradient of 225‰ and a maximum gradient of 250‰. To this day, it is considered one of the most beautiful and impressive railway routes in the entire Bernese Oberland.

The bold alignment and constantly changing views are repeatedly awe-inspiring. Particularly unique is the tunnel through the Planalp rock face, offering a spectacular view through a tunnel window. High above the abyss, like from an eagle's nest, passengers enjoy an unforgettable view of the village of Brienz, the green lake below, and the Giessbach waterfalls on the opposite shore.

Planalp

After 30 minutes, the train reaches Planalp at an altitude of 1,341 meters above sea level. The steam locomotives take a 10-minute stop. For the fireman and the driver, however, the hard work continues: refilling water—around 2,000 liters evaporate during the ascent—and lubricating the machinery. Passengers can use this time to take photographs.

In addition to alpine huts, there are several chalets here. Just a five-minute walk from the station is a cozy mountain restaurant with a sunny terrace. Planalp is the starting point for various hikes and short walks.

Rolling Stock of the Brienz Rothorn Railway

Until 1973, seven steam locomotives handled all traffic on their own. Acquiring new rolling stock was difficult, as no one was building mountain steam locomotives anymore, and there was little experience with alternative, non-electric drive systems. To protect the steam locomotives and reduce waiting times, the decision was made—after lengthy discussions—to purchase three diesel locomotives. The first entered service in 1974.

In Operation Today:

- 5 steam locomotives – built in 1891/92
- 2 steam locomotives – built in 1933/36
- 3 diesel-hydrostatic locomotives – built in 1973/75/87
- 1 steam locomotive – built in 1992
- 2 steam locomotives – built in 1996

In the summer of 1996, two new steam locomotives were inaugurated. The Swiss Locomotive and Machine Works once again built steam engines—this time using the latest technical knowledge, while maintaining the external appearance of traditional steam locomotives.

Operating season: early June to mid-October, Journey time: 1 hour

This event inspired a creative project: every summer, around eight wood sculptors transform tree stumps along the hiking trail from Axalp above Brienz to the idyllic Hinterburgseeli into artistic sculptures. The motifs range from animals and wildlife to forest, nature, and mountain themes. Today, these artworks line the entire trail back to Axalp.

Brienz Wildlife Park

Founded in 1896 at the initiative of the Brienz School of Woodcarving, the wildlife park originally served as a source of inspiration and nature study for future woodcarvers. Bei Brandausbruch

Ruhe und Übersicht bewahren.
Telefonische oder persönliche Alarmanmeldung an Telefonzentrale, Concierge oder Reception: klare Angaben über Zimmernummer und Wahrnehmungen.

Instructions en cas d'incendie

Gardez votre calme et agissez avec sang-froid.
Donnez l'alarme par téléphone à la centrale, au concierge ou à la réception. Indiquez avec précision le numéro de votre chambre et l'étendue du sinistre.

In caso d'incendio

Mantenere la calma.
Avvertire telefonicamente o di persona il centralino, la portineria o la reception. Specificare il numero di camera e le osservazioni.

In case of fire

Do not panic.
Inform hotel telephone exchange, concierge or reception immediately, either by telephone or in person. State clearly your room number and give details of fire.

Türen und Fenster schließen: Durchzug und Rauchentwicklung wird so vermindert.

Nur allerwichtigste Papiere und Wertsachen zusammenpacken, ruhig das Zimmer verlassen.

Keinen Lift benutzen.

Wenn Korridore, Ausgänge oder Fluchtwege nicht erreicht werden können: im Zimmer bleiben, Türen und Fenster schließen, Ritzen mit nassen Tüchern verstopfen.

Hinter dem geschlossenen Fenster Rettungsmannschaft auf sich aufmerksam machen: Winken mit grossen, hellen Gegenständen.

Daran denken: Panik ist gefährlicher als Feuer.

Brandverhütung

Im Bett nicht rauchen.

Keine elektrischen Strahler verwenden.
Offene Flammen (Kerzen, Benzin-, Gas-, Spirit-, Meta-Brenner) vermeiden.

Bei elektrischen Wärmeapparaten (Bügeleisen, Heizkissen, Tauchsieder, Kocher) sofort nach Gebrauch Stecker ziehen. Wärmekissen vor dem Einschlafen abstellen.

Keine Reparaturen an elektrischen Anlagen ausführen. Defekte an Concierge oder Reception melden.

Fermez portes et fenêtres pour éviter les courants d'air et la propagation du feu.
N'empportez que les papiers et objets de valeur les plus importants. Quittez calmement votre chambre.

Ne prenez pas l'ascenseur.

Si vous ne pouvez pas atteindre les couloirs, les sorties de secours et les voies d'évacuation, restez dans votre chambre, fermez portes et fenêtres et bouchiez les interstices avec du linge mouillé (autour des portes et des fenêtres).

Signalez votre présence à l'équipe de secours en agitant des objets volumineux, si possible de couleur claire, derrière la fenêtre fermée.

N'oubliez pas l'essentiel: la panique tue plus que le feu!

Prévention des incendies

Ne pas fumer au lit.

Ne pas utiliser de radiateur électrique.
Eviter les flammes nues (bougies, brûleurs à gaz, essence, alcool, etc.).

Débrancher les appareils électriques (fer à repasser, coussin chauffant, chauffe-lit, bouilloire électrique, etc.) immédiatement après usage. Débrancher également les couvertures électriques avant de s'endormir.

Ne pas réparer soi-même l'installation électrique. Annoncer les défauts au concierge ou à la réception.

Chiudere porte e finestre onde evitare correnti d'aria e sviluppo di fumo.

Raccogliere solo documenti ed oggetti di stretta necessità, lasciare la camera con calma.

Non usare l'ascensore.

In caso di corridoi, uscite, vie di scampo bloccati: rimanere in camera, chiudere porte e finestre e turare fessure con cenci umidi.

Attirare l'attenzione della squadra di soccorso dietro le finestre chiuse (con oggetti chiari, luminosi, riflettenti).

Attenzione: il panico è più pericoloso del fuoco.

Prevenzioni contro gli incendi

Non fumare a letto.

Non usare stufette elettriche. Evitare fiamme di qualsiasi genere (candele, bruciatori a gas, a benzina, a spirito e a metano).

Dopo l'uso di apparecchi elettrici (ferri da stiro, termofori, bollitori d'acqua, fornelletti) togliere la spina. Spegnerne i termofori prima di addormentarsi.

Non effettuare riparazioni alle installazioni elettriche. In caso di guasti avvisare la portineria o la reception.

Fire prevention

Never smoke in bed.

Never use electric ray equipment or open flame devices (candles, fuel, gas and spirit burners, etc.).

Electrical equipment such as irons, cookers, water heaters, should always be unplugged immediately after use. Electric bedding appliances should be disconnected before you sleep.

Inform the concierge or reception of any faulty electrical installations; never try to repair them yourself.
